

Marge Bruchac
Abenaki Indian and Historical Consultant

Marge Bruchac described the furrowed road that Native Americans in the local area traveled in the early 19th century. To illustrate the prejudice that existed during that time, she role played Mali Geet, a Native American who aided residents in the village. Her presentation helped us understand the secondary status historically assigned to minorities and the personal pain it must have caused. She challenged us to question the origin and validity of existing perceptions of individuals from different ethnic groups.
